SONG OF THE HOUSEKEEPER.

Sweep, sweep, sweep, In the short December days, And dust, dust, dust, In the summer's silvery haze! It's oh! to be a slave, And forever a duster flirt.

In a hand to hand battle with dirt. While the dust rises up to our eyes,

And wear the years of our life away

And scrub, scrub, scrub. Then drive out those horrible flies! Husbands hungry and tired, With buttonless trousers and shirt, Meekly retire from the awful scene,

While we fight a pitched battle with dirt . Oh! men with brow serene, How much work you make for your wives! Leaving your boots and shoes "under foot"-And eating cake, tarts and pies.

Cook, cook, enek, To meet the demands of our kin, nd bake, bake, bake, Though the heart is faint within.

Oh! for a little change, A respite however brief! From petty trials of housework free-From mutton, pork and beef. New songs to gladden the heart, To all would be far more sweet Than that old, old tune by housekeeper's sung;

"What shall we have to eat?" Oh! but to breathe the breath Of the fragrant new mown hay! And in pastures and woodlands green To wander far away,

For one short hour Away from the housework to steal, And dreamily rest by a babbling brook While-some one else cooks the meal. -Portland Transcript.
